Discussion questions

3. The company's motto 'Do what you like. Like what you do'.

This motto shapes management practices by encouraging employee engagement, intrinsic motivation and cultural alignment. Managers are likely to prioritize job satisfaction, assign roles based on individual strengths and foster a positive work environment.

However, it may also create challenges if not managed carefully. Over emphasis on personal preference could conflict with organizational needs, requiring managers to balance passion with accountability and performance expectations.

4. Challenges of employing friends -

Hiring friends can lead to role ambiguity, favoritism and difficulty to enforce discipline or performance standards. Personal relationship may interfere with objective decision-making and professional boundaries.

To address these challenges -

The company should implement clear organizational structures, defined roles, formal performance evaluation system. Establishing professional boundaries and transparent communication is essential to ensure fairness and accountability.
